Acknowledgments

The Local Studies Section of South Dublin Libraries would like to acknowledge all those who so willingly assisted with this exhibition. This exhibition would not have been possible without the assistance of the Malone family, Rose, Stephen and John who supplied much original material and permitted its use; Peter Healy, Dermot Quinn and Tom Barraghy supplied original material and permitted its use; Sean Rothery shared his memories of J. B. Malone and The Irish Trails Office, the RTE Archives and the National Library of Ireland supplied material from their collections and permitted its use.

Frank Tracy had suggested that the exhibition be prepared to mark the twenty fifth anniversary of J. B. Malone's death and then undertook the monumental task of indexing all of J. B. Malone's hill and mountain articles carried in the Evening Herald and preparing a series of articles for the Evening Herald based on J. B. Malone's original articles. Michael Fewer researched J. B. Malone and his life and work, located material, compiled the text of the exhibition, selected materials for inclusion and devised the exhibition. He also contributed a commemorative article to the Evening Herald. Cormac Looney, Deputy Editor of the Evening Herald engaged fully with the celebration of J. B. Malone's work, carrying eleven articles in the Evening Herald during September and October 2014. David Power assisted in preparing text for the commemorative articles and in proof-reading. Noel Smyth of Silverbark Creative designed the exhibition and peripheral materials with his usual creative flair.
